Data Protection vs Legal Representatives in EU and UK clinical trials

Clinical trial sponsors operating across the EU and UK may need to appoint several different representatives, but understanding which roles are required can be complex. Data Protection Representatives and clinical trial Legal Representatives fulfil separate legal requirements and should not be treated as interchangeable.

Our latest blog explains the difference between these roles, when sponsors may need to appoint them, and what to consider when planning representation for clinical trials across the EU and UK.

NHS England publishes DSPT version 9

On 4 September 2026, NHS England released version 9 of the Data Security and Protection Toolkit (DSPT) for 2026/27.

Key changes include alignment of the Category 1 CAF DSPT with version 4 of the NCSC's Cyber Assessment Framework (CAF), and two new sub-categories for CQC Market Oversight providers and Local Authorities. These largely follow Category 3 requirements, with additional questions relating to the NCSC's CAF assessment.

'IT Suppliers' have also been renamed 'Suppliers', reflecting that Category 2 covers providers of goods and services beyond traditional IT.

Organisations should review the updated requirements and change log ahead of the 30 June 2027 submission deadline.

Guernsey DPC highlights verbal personal data breach

The Office of the Data Protection Authority (ODPA) received 49 personal data breach reports in Q2 2026, down from 65 in the previous quarter. High-risk breaches also fell from seven to four.

Despite the overall decrease, the Data Protection Commissioner highlights a case where a doctor discussed a patient's identifying details and sensitive health information during a telephone call that was overheard by others.

The DPC reminds organisations that personal data breaches are not limited to physical records. Organisations should ensure staff understand that protecting personal data extends to verbal communications, particularly when discussing sensitive information.

Irish DPC fines HSE €645K over storage and retention of medical records

Ireland's Data Protection Commission (DPC) found that Health Service Executive (HSE) records had been stored insecurely in unsuitable facilities, with some retained for longer than necessary. The HSE has been ordered to audit its storage facilities, securely destroy records that are no longer required, and introduce processes to regularly assess compliance with its retention policies.

The decision highlights the importance of ensuring historic records are not overlooked when applying retention policies. Organisations should understand what information they hold, including older paper archives, and securely dispose of records that are no longer necessary.

Cyprus launches CCTV compliance audits

Cyprus' Data Protection Commissioner has launched on-site audits of catering and entertainment businesses to assess whether their use of CCTV complies with the GDPR. The audits will examine how surveillance systems are installed and used, including the positioning of cameras and the areas being monitored. Businesses are reminded that CCTV should only be used where necessary and proportionate and should not monitor areas where individuals have a greater expectation of privacy.

Organisations using CCTV should regularly review their surveillance practices to ensure they remain necessary, proportionate, and appropriately documented.

Netherlands launch online DPIA tool

The Dutch government has launched new online tools to help organisations identify and assess privacy risks. The tools, which are currently in a beta version, include:

- A pre-scan, which helps users determine whether a DPIA or other impact assessment is required
- A guided DPIA based on the government's existing reporting framework
- A guided IAMA to assess the impact of algorithms on human rights

Designed to make assessments easier to complete and support collaboration between those involved, the tools guide users through the relevant questions and documentation.

CalPrivacy brings first CCPA action against data broker

LocateSmarter LLC was ordered to pay $116,490 and change its practices after it failed to register by the required deadline and unlawfully required consumers to provide partial Social Security numbers to exercise their opt-out rights.

The decision reinforces CalPrivacy's previous guidance that data minimisation applies when handling consumer rights requests. Organisations should consider what information is genuinely necessary to fulfil or verify a request and avoid collecting additional personal data without justification.

Canadian OPC calls for stronger safeguards in open banking rules

The Office of the Privacy Commissioner of Canada (OPC) has recommended stronger privacy protections in proposed Consumer-Driven Banking Regulations, which would allow consumers to direct participating organisations to securely share their financial data.

Whilst supporting the proposed framework, the OPC has called for greater clarity about the personal data covered and stronger requirements to ensure security safeguards reflect the sensitivity of the information being processed. It also recommends tighter controls around publicly available data and greater coordination between regulators.

The recommendations highlight the importance of building privacy protections into data-sharing frameworks from the outset, particularly where highly sensitive financial information is involved.
